more than 3 football fields	I don't think Redmond's interests are served by providing support for pushing an addictive substance (http://tinyurl.com/kjo9cwe) that is so detrimental to society. Whether legal or not in Washington State, I don't think Redmond, or any other municipality, is under any obligation to provide licenses to these businesses. There are already businesses that cater to this within a very short distance of Redmond's city limits. more than 3 football fields	Seattle in SODO next to the strip clubs and other pot stores to centralize drug users. It's ok not to allow pot stores. Other cities in this state have said licensing will be permitted once the federal government legalizes it for the country until then, the city is breaking federal law by allowing pot retail stores. Furthermore everyone that is a decision maker needs to go to a pot store and buy some marijuana and smoke it to understand the power of his drug compared to alcohol and tobacco before making s decision. This is not a political issue, this is about public safety. You all must understand the power of this drug and the ease of consumption, especially for kids with edibles. You must also ask yourself, are you ok with your kids having easy access to this drug and normalizing it's use. These are lasting decisions that will affect our community. Go to Amsterdam, go out at night near their pot bars before you decide if this is a good idea for our community. This is your community, it's our community. If Redmond is so rich in schools, parks, daycares, game arcades, and transit centers that a marijuana store cannot be established, then Redmond should not fudge the established buffer to place a store closer to one of these locations. I say let's keep the revenue local and embrace recreational marijuana if not for the economics, do it for the community who shuns liquor as a social staple thereby creating a safer and more responsible Redmond. The fact remains, we will continue to use Marijuana, regardless of approval from the local government. To resist the will of the voting public, Redmond will continue to be known as a stodgy suburb of Bellevue. The Marijuana retailers seeking a Redmond location are professional, civic minded and perhaps surprising to some, they are parents who are as concerned for our youth as anyone who would vote against a marijuana retail store in Redmond.	YES	1/21/2016 15:51	1/21/2016 16:08	a1eacd361e

The thought of driving around the city with my kids and seeing pot shops and having to explain it to them is a disgusting thought! Shame on anyone who is considering reducing the buffer zones to less than the originally agreed upon 1,000 feet. That's what voters approved and changing it without voter approval should not be allowed. Anyone can tell this is all about making money at the cost of our children and our health. Shame on the the Liquor/Cannibus Control Board for allowing cities to reduce the zones and I hope Redmond's planning commission makes the right choice and keeps the current zoning!! more than 3 football fields	Redmond is a beautiful city that is very high younger population and school kids. Having marijuana store and processing center will spoil the Redmond culture that city has strived to build for decades and will push family living in Redmond or would like to move to Redmond. I don't believe the current black market in Redmond as big as the supply these store bring to service exist marijuana users but attraction others which in turn could increase the crime rate in peaceful city like Redmond. The statistical evidence about crime rate down in city with store only apply to those that historically had higher crime rate. Redmond fortunately does not fit in that category. In the interest of the city I love and younger generations, NO marijuana store in Redmond and keep it a model city. My answers for Question 1 and 3 are NOT my opinion and I only answered it to submit my comment. It would nice to have a question like "Do you want a Marijuana store in Redmond?"
